The play opens with the Trojan War in full swing. The Greeks have besieged the city of Troy for ten years, and the Trojans are on the brink of defeat. Hector, the eldest son of King Priam, is the Trojans' greatest warrior. He is a brave and noble man, but he is also a man of peace. He knows that the war is pointless, and he longs for a way to end it.

One day, Hector meets Andromache, a young woman who has lost her husband and children in the war. Andromache's grief and despair move Hector deeply, and he begins to question the war even more. He realizes that the war is not only destroying Troy, but it is also destroying the lives of innocent people.

Hector decides to take a stand against the war. He goes to the Greek camp and asks for a ceasefire. The Greeks are surprised by Hector's request, but they agree to it. Hector and the Greek commander, Agamemnon, meet to discuss the terms of the ceasefire. Hector argues that the war is pointless and that it should be stopped. Agamemnon agrees with Hector, but he says that he cannot end the war without the consent of the other Greek leaders.

Hector returns to Troy and tries to convince the other Trojan leaders to agree to the ceasefire. However, the other leaders are afraid of the Greeks and they refuse to agree to the ceasefire. Hector is disappointed, but he does not give up. He continues to fight for peace, even though he knows that it is a long shot.

In the end, Hector is killed in battle. However, his death is not in vain. His sacrifice inspires the Trojans to continue fighting for peace, and eventually the war ends. La Guerre De Troie Aura Pas Lieu is a powerful and moving play that explores the themes of war, peace, and the human condition.
